Global Women's Network for the Energy Transition (GWNET)

Historical background

GWNET was established in 2017 by four co-founders: Ms. Christine Lins (Austria), Ms. Barbara Fischer-Aupperle (Germany), Ms. Emily Koulouvaris (Greece) and Ms. Irene Giner-Reichl (Austria) and registered as an international association under Austrian law. With a special focus on climate change, sustainable infrastructure and sustainable cities, GWNET has already established a fruitful cooperation with UNIDO, including in the context of the Vienna Energy Forum.

GWNET supports women active in sustainable energy through networking, mentoring and knowledge transfers. It advocates for greater inclusiveness of the energy sector in general, keeping in mind that energy transitions entail deep societal transformations that will benefit from being able to draw from as wide and diverse a talent pool as possible.

Relations with the United Nations, other IGOs and NGOs

GWNET maintains constructive and mutually useful relations to a number of non-governmental organizations which are relevant to GWNET's objectives. It has been invited to participate in the United Nations Secretary General's Technical Working Group on Energy Action to Advance other SDGs in preparation for the High-Level Dialogue on Energy at the General Assembly in the fall of 2021. GWNET has also been invited to participate in the Lancet COVID-19 Commission's Green Recovery Taskforce as well as the Green Growth Knowledge Platform's working group on gender.

GWNET is a member of the IRENA-led Sustainable Energy Jobs Platform. GWNET furthermore co-leads the UNIDO Call to Action on Youth and Women in Sustainable Energy announced on 13 January 2021 and cooperates with the United Nations system and other relevant international organizations, such as IRENA (several collaborations on Women in Sustainable Energy, Women in Wind), OECD/IEA (in particular the Clean Energy Ministerial Secretariat) and the OSCE.
