INDUSTRIAL ESTATES, INDUSTRIAL AREAS
AND FREE ZONES

1d.75-6723

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for the integrity of the financial system and for the ability to detect and prevent fraud.

2. The second part of the document outlines the specific requirements for record-keeping, including the need to maintain original documents and to keep copies of all records for a minimum of seven years. It also discusses the importance of ensuring that records are stored in a secure and accessible manner.

3. The third part of the document discusses the role of the auditor in verifying the accuracy of the records. It emphasizes that the auditor must exercise due diligence and must be able to trace all transactions back to their source. It also discusses the importance of the auditor's independence and objectivity.

4. The fourth part of the document discusses the consequences of failing to maintain accurate records. It emphasizes that failure to do so can result in severe penalties, including fines and imprisonment. It also discusses the importance of the auditor's role in ensuring that these consequences are enforced.

The following lists of United Nations and UNIDO Sales Publications, Articles, Reports and Mimeographed Documents on Small-scale Industry are also available:

Establishment of Industrial Estates in Underdeveloped Countries, United Nations sales publication, New York 1961, 50 pages.

Language:

E F S

The publication deals principally with the role of industrial estates in policies of industrialization with special reference to promotion of small-scale industries. It gives first a general picture of industrial estate projects - planned and completed - in various countries. It then describes and analyses in detail the objectives and policies bearing on the establishment of industrial estates in three industrial countries where the device has been extensively applied: the United States, the United Kingdom and Italy. This is followed by a review of objectives and policies in two developing countries where important industrial estates programmes are being carried out: India and Puerto Rico. Detailed information is also provided on policies and achievements in Jamaica, Mexico, Brazil, Nigeria and Pakistan.

The experience of these countries is assessed in the next chapter. Four main types of policies in which industrial estates play a role are distinguished: location and development policies based, respectively, on indirect and direct control; industrialization policies based on inducements to investors from abroad; and industrialization policies based on provision of integrated measures of assistance, a type which is particularly suitable for the promotion of small industries. The chapter also contains a discussion of the types of estates suitable for developing countries at different levels of industrial development, and of policies of location and admission. It concludes with an examination of certain secondary effects of industrial estates, and of the role of the latter in development schemes of broader scope. In the last chapter, industrial estates are discussed as a means of promoting small-scale industry with special attention to problems of technical and financial assistance. Problems of planning industrial estates are examined in two appendices to this chapter: the first deals with exploratory surveys; the second contains a case study concerning the establishment of an industrial estate in a developing country.

The Physical Planning of Industrial Estates,
United Nations sales publication, New York,
1962, 51 pages.

E F S

The purpose of this publication is to provide guidance in locating, planning, laying out and building industrial estates, especially those for small-scale industries. After discussing location, planning and control of land use within the broader context of urbanization and regional planning, it examines such physical planning problems as zoning, restrictive covenants, siting, transportation, provision of utilities, size of the estate, size and coverage of factory lots; layout of plots, roads, loading and parking spaces; size, layout, design and construction materials for factory buildings of various types, such as "standard" and "nursery" or "nest" factories, and for administrative and ancillary buildings and facilities, including storage and warehousing. The publication also discusses the role of special industrial estates such as "flatted factories" and urban industrial parks in programmes of urban industrial development and redevelopment. It contains data on the norms for plots, factories, road widths and land use adopted or recommended in various countries.
